HE lived in the room across from his, but he had never seen her. They were both young; both strugglers in the city; both writers. He conceived the notion of writing about her; and she thought it would be a bully idea to write a story

There you have the plot of the best story of the week. The best stories are not always written by the best known authors. This is by a new writer, Florence Ryerson. Watch for this story, "In the Room Across from His."

The First Man to Come Back

S EVEN expeditions have set forth to explore the poisoned arrow country of South America; six have never been heard of again. The seventh was headed by a certain Capt. Besley, and cost him $50,000-and indescribable suffering. But he came through, and has told his story to Cleveland Moffett, who tells it to you in our next Sunday Magazine.

"I Shall Never Marry"

H E said it at the age when plenty of other men have said the same thing—just before he left home to enter college. But there was a reason for the bold assertion in his case. He loved only one girl; and between her family and his was a feud of many years. Which won, Cupid or the feud?

It's called "The Georgia Shakespeare"-one of the most charming love stories we've printed in a long while.

Their Wives Are Successful. Too

THERE are a dozen very interesting couples in the United States. They are happily married; they have children; but both husband and wife pursue a profession, and the wife is as famous as the
